

Why you have received this citation:

Your car-based behavior was so egregious that some cycling samaritan took the time to issue you a fine. Hopefully, this will cause you to pause and consider the social and financial costs of your unsustainable behavior.

Why you shouldn't complain about cyclists:

While you've got a ton of steel and an airbag keeping you out of harm's way, we're entirely at the mercy of your ability to safely navigate your 4 wheels. Your commute makes our air hard to breathe, stresses you out, and clogs the roads. In contrast, our rides foster appreciation for the environment, keep us in shape, and replace traffic jams with community-building. In exchange, some of us obsess over the weight of our derailleurs, coast through red lights, and get really angry when you don't drive safely.

Why biking is wonderful:

It's a way to move through the world that improves your body, builds your community, and satisfies your soul. And, fellow cyclists tend to be really pleasant to look at:)

Why you should pay your fine:

You're not legally bound to shower, smile at your neighbors, vote, or dance in an unexpected rainstorm. But you probably (hopefully) do a majority of these things out of concern for your own happiness and the greater good.

Who you should pay this fine to:

Put it towards buying a bike for yourself. Or, if you have a bike, get it tuned up and start riding it more. If you've got money left over, here are 2 great charities (unaffiliated with this citation) who would be happy to take it off your hands in a tax-deductible manner:

League of Bicycle Voters: <http://www.lobv.org/>

Yellow Bike Project: <http://austinyellowbike.org>

Thanks, have a great day, and remember:

Why you have received this citation:

Your car-based behavior was so egregious that some cycling samaritan took the time to issue you a fine. Hopefully, this will cause you to pause and consider the social and financial costs of your unsustainable behavior.

Why you shouldn't complain about cyclists:

While you've got a ton of steel and an airbag keeping you out of harm's way, we're entirely at the mercy of your ability to safely navigate your 4 wheels. Your commute makes our air hard to breathe, stresses you out, and clogs the roads. In contrast, our rides foster appreciation for the environment, keep us in shape, and replace traffic jams with community-building. In exchange, some of us obsess over the weight of our derailleurs, coast through red lights, and get really angry when you don't drive safely.

Why biking is wonderful:

It's a way to move through the world that improves your body, builds your community, and satisfies your soul. And, fellow cyclists tend to be really pleasant to look at:)

Why you should pay your fine:

You're not legally bound to shower, smile at your neighbors, vote, or dance in an unexpected rainstorm. But you probably (hopefully) do a majority of these things out of concern for your own happiness and the greater good.

Who you should pay this fine to:

Put it towards buying a bike for yourself. Or, if you have a bike, get it tuned up and start riding it more. If you've got money left over, here are 2 great charities (unaffiliated with this citation) who would be happy to take it off your hands in a tax-deductible manner:

League of Bicycle Voters: <http://www.lobv.org/>

Yellow Bike Project: <http://austinyellowbike.org>

Thanks, have a great day, and remember:

Why you have received this citation:

Your car-based behavior was so egregious that some cycling samaritan took the time to issue you a fine. Hopefully, this will cause you to pause and consider the social and financial costs of your unsustainable behavior.

Why you shouldn't complain about cyclists:

While you've got a ton of steel and an airbag keeping you out of harm's way, we're entirely at the mercy of your ability to safely navigate your 4 wheels. Your commute makes our air hard to breathe, stresses you out, and clogs the roads. In contrast, our rides foster appreciation for the environment, keep us in shape, and replace traffic jams with community-building. In exchange, some of us obsess over the weight of our derailleurs, coast through red lights, and get really angry when you don't drive safely.

Why biking is wonderful:

It's a way to move through the world that improves your body, builds your community, and satisfies your soul. And, fellow cyclists tend to be really pleasant to look at:)

Why you should pay your fine:

You're not legally bound to shower, smile at your neighbors, vote, or dance in an unexpected rainstorm. But you probably (hopefully) do a majority of these things out of concern for your own happiness and the greater good.

Who you should pay this fine to:

Put it towards buying a bike for yourself. Or, if you have a bike, get it tuned up and start riding it more. If you've got money left over, here are 2 great charities (unaffiliated with this citation) who would be happy to take it off your hands in a tax-deductible manner:

League of Bicycle Voters: <http://www.lobv.org/>

Yellow Bike Project: <http://austinyellowbike.org>

Thanks, have a great day, and remember:

bike defense kit
bdk.dirtnail.com

bike defense kit
bdk.dirtnail.com

bike defense kit
bdk.dirtnail.com